It was a great experience for both students as well as teachers, who participated in the competition with enthusiasm. from their rooftops. Unlike other Hindu festivals which follow the lunar motion, Makar Sankranti follows the movement of the sun. It marks the beginning of the sun's transition into the zodiac of Capricorn (Makar = Capricorn, Sankranti = transition). This makes it the only festival to fall on a fixed date every year January 14th. It is a festive day all over India. Each region celebrates its own local form of this festival. New study explains how low-dose aspirin may prevent cancer

Jaya Kumari, BJMC 1st yr.

New research conducted by a team of scientists from Oregon Health and Science University (OHSU) in collaboration with Oregon State University (OSU) in the U.S., reinforces the idea that low-dose aspirin intake may help stop cancer and hinder cancer cells from proliferating. Additionally, the research also explains the mechanism by which a small dose of aspirin may indeed inhibit cancer cell proliferation and metastasis. Cancer is one of the leading causes of death in the world, according to the World Health Organization (WHO). Its prevalence is predicted to increase in the next few years. In 2012, cancer accounted for 8.2 million deaths worldwide.

In terms of prevention, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) recommend for making healthy lifestyle and dietary choices such as avoiding tobacco and alcohol as well as staying with physically active and eating plenty of fruits and vegetables. New research reinforces the idea that low-dose aspirin intake may also help to prevent cancer.

This is the first time that a study has shown the ability of platelets to regulate the expression of c-MYC in cancer cells.

The researchers note that almost a third of colon cancer patients and 42% of patient with pancreatic cancer had over expression of c-MYC oncoprotein.

They also find that the impact of aspirin has on blood platelets is just as effective in high doses as it is at low ones. As a result, clinicians can weigh up the risks and benefits of aspirin intake, as well as reduce the risk of bleeding - which is a common side effect of ingesting too much aspirin.

terest in books. The children's pavilion especially remained a favourite spot among parents as also kids. “YES WE CAN “A Symbolic Farewell Speech by Mr. BARACK OBAMA

Obama giving his Farewell Speech.

Prachi Rathi, BJMC 1st yr.

‘Yes we can’ these were the last words delivered by Mr. President in his farewell speech. Mere miles from where Barack Obama gave his presidential victory speech in Grant Park, Chicago, eight years ago, he delivered a symbolic farewell speech at Chicago’s McCormick Place Tuesday night on 10th January, 2017. Popular but politically humbled, President Barack Obama said goodbye to the nation Tuesday night, declaring during his farewell address that he hasn’t abandoned his vision of progressive change but warning that it now comes with a new set of caveats. Mr. Barack Obama started his speech with a note of Thanks to American people. He said that he had been very touched with the wishes he received over the past eight years and now it is his turn to say Thanks. In his speech, Mr. Obama praised the people for all the support and respect he received from them. He stated that people were the only reason for his proud as he felt that the conversation with them at White House, canteens, schools or colleges are what kept him honest, cool and inspired. He also said that he was not a president but also a human being and every day he learned from people something new that made him a better Optus, and a unique person. In his speech, Obama gave the account of past eight years, goals and strengths of the America by saying that this country suffered eight years ago with deflation, recession and unemployment. Mr Obama said that young Americans - including those who worked on his campaigns, and who believe "in a fair, just, inclusive America" - left him feeling "even more optimistic about this country than I was when we started". In choosing Chicago, Mr Obama had earlier said he wanted to return to "where it all started" for him and First Lady Michelle Obama, instead of delivering the speech from the White House. Over the course of three-quarters of an hour, Mr Obama spoke of his effort to bring about change during his two terms in office, and admitted that he had not always succeeded. His was joined on-stage at the end of his speech by Ms. Clinton, a symbolic handing over of the baton. "Yes we can. Yes we did." A bookend to the speech he delivered on the night he won the presidency in Grant Park, Chicago,

Barack Obama’s farewell address contained much of the same hope and optimism that were hallmarks of his candidacy while at the same time outlining his legacy.

But it was also an elegantly worded warning: about the country’s broken politics, its naked partisanship, its stark economic inequalities, its social and racial dislocation. Though he did not mention the President-elect by name, much of it obviously read like a rebuttal to Donald Trump’s campaign. Obama called for respect for the science of climate change and drew one of his biggest applause lines when he noted: "I reject discrimination against Muslim Americans." The line "democracy can buckle when we give in to fear," could easily be interpreted as being aimed at Donald Trump. Mr Obama’s speech was widely admired for his lyricism, delivery, and vision of America as an inclusive, positive society, despite the very real problems it faced.
