'Stage for Youth'

THOUGHT OF THE WEEK

The moment I have realized God sitting in every human body, the moment I stand in reverence before every human being and see God in him - that moment I am free from bondage, everything that binds.

DISCIPLINE IN A STUDENT LIFE

Payal Chaudhary, BJMC II Year

“Discipline is a way of life, where one tries to be on time and live in a systematic way.”

Discipline is typically integral to the success of a college student. Others enter college with limited self-discipline and have to learn the hard way that they need to rapidly develop discipline strategies to get good grades and balance life demands.

Discipline is when one uses reason to determine the best course of action regardless of one's desires, which may be the opposite of excited. Virtuous behavior can be described as when one's values are aligned with one's aims: to do what one knows is best and to do it gladly.

Attending and actively participating in classes are keys to college success. This requires the discipline to get up in the morning, to make education a priority and to give maximum effort during the classroom experience. Disciplined students come to class prepared and ready to participate in class and small group discussions. They also take notes and ask questions. In a traditional face-to-face classroom, attendance and engagement are necessary to learn course content and to succeed in homework, tests and projects.

Some students attend classes, but lack the discipline to read their textbooks and study. Staff at Clemson University point out that successful students schedule study time to ensure they consistently prepare for classes and complete assignments. Typically, colleges advise students to plan to spend two to three hours of time outside class on reading, homework and other class commitments. Discipline in these areas usually leads to more complete homework and projects, better test preparation and a better overall learning experience in combination with classroom engagement.

Proactive strategies with discipline are a major part of the battle for life balance and academic success.
